LOGO ON DIFFERENT BACKGROUNDS

The logo may be used on a solid-color background; however, background colors must not overlap with the logo's color palette or fail to provide sufficient visual contrast, as this may reduce the logo's clarity and create a blending effect with the background.

The exception is the black-and-white (B&W) version of the logo. When this version is used, the logo's primary brand colors may also be used as background colors.

DISPLAY TYPEFACE

A display typeface is designed for large-scale text, such as headings, posters, logos, or advertising materials. Display typefaces are usually more decorative and visually expressive than body text fonts, which is why they are not suitable for long-form text.

Hatton is used as the primary display typeface for headings, key statements, and visual accents. Its high-contrast serif forms give the brand an elegant, refined, and expressive character. The typeface is intended for short, impactful text and should not be used for long-form body copy.

SECONDARY TYPEFACE AND DIGITAL FALLBACK

A secondary typeface is an additional font used to support the primary typeface in specific applications while maintaining visual consistency.

A digital fallback typeface is a substitute font used when the primary typeface is unavailable or unsupported on certain digital platforms or software.

Montserrat is used as a secondary typeface and digital fallback because of its clean structure, strong readability, and wide availability across digital platforms. It supports consistent brand communication when the primary typeface is unavailable, while maintaining a modern, clear, and accessible visual appearance.
